

Mahamudra Poem

How can you say more than what you see?
In the realm of Mahamudra, it is possible to say
as well as see.
Great siddhas have said,
"Mind is ungraspable."
Therefore, I think that they are right.
This morning, the light from the window
Made a sensation on my eyelids somewhat greenish, violet and blue on my eyelids.
This in itself is not a description of mind
Although this is mind itself.
For those who are uninitiated, it is a description.
For those who have meditated, it is a discipline.
For those who have accomplished, it doesn't mean anything.

To Dan Meade, with all my love and affection,
for his support and practice of the Buddhadharma,
I dedicate these verses which arose spontaneously
from my mind, on this day, 9 July, 1983, 7:28 am.
